man, who always appears upon the scene at the last moment. On which account, I think, it will be better for us to speculate under the prudent supervision of a professional man, than to lay our shoulders down to the task of doing so, and so, for the sake of forcing our way through upon our right, expose ourselves to the risk of being taken, and perhaps, robbed of it. If you do not extend your duties to me, I have said, I shall look upon your silence as a token of your concurrence in the same opinion with me.

James T. Moore. I am heartily glad you are all off again.
