Routledge Revivals: Varieties of Residential Experience (1975) Jack Tizard, Ian Sinclair, R. V. G. Clarke, 2017-07-05 First published in 1975 this book compiles a number of studies concerning institutional care and children which address the question of why institutions that serve apparently similar functions differ so much The book uses comparative methods such as measurement of different dimensions of institutional care and analysis of interrelationships among specific structural and functional features which characterise particular institutions As a result the book draws broad conclusions about the importance of factors that have dynamic influence on the manner in which institutions function and the reasons why they differ The editors reject the steampress model which postulates that institutions are more or less alike They discuss ideological and organisational variation differences in staffing and the manner in which children respond to them and consider these issues as factors that influence the way in which an institution functions as a whole Subsequent chapters describe comparative studies carried out in institutions for the mentally handicapped approved schools residential nurseries probation hostels other correctional institutions and units for autistic children The book enables the reader to appreciate achievements and shortcomings of contemporary research and thinking in this field

Delinquency, Its Roots, Careers, and Prospects Donald James West, 1982 Delinquency evaluates one of the largest longitudinal observational studies of juvenile delinquents ever conducted Utilizing a normal population sample and conducting individual interviews repeatedly over many years the author and his colleagues followed the development of 400 British working class boys from age eight to twenty five of whom one third eventually had criminal records Five factors were found to predict most delinquent behavior the most powerful statistically being the presence of a criminal parent By measuring the accumulated pressure of these factors D J West demonstrates the extent to which delinquency can be predicted from classroom observations or social background at an early age He outlines policy guidelines that would tailor intervention to a youth's age and circumstances and he argues persuasively that positive change in the parents situation usually produces good effects on the children

Sleep, Benzodiazepines and Performance I. Hindmarch, H. Ott, T. Roth, 2012-12-06 The following papers were presented at an International Workshop on experimental methodologies and research strategies in sleep benzodiazepines and performance during the VII International Congress of Psychiatry in Vienna 1983 Authors were asked to examine and review the methods used and the results obtained from the various studies within their particular expertise and to provide guidelines for future strategies in the psychopharmacology of sleep It has long been felt by sleep researchers psychopharmacologists and clinicians that the effects of drugs on sleep or even sleep itself cannot be evaluated without reference to the daytime behaviour of the individual. Sleep and daytime performance are complementary aspects of the same circadian cycle. The modification of sleep parameters by hypnotic medication must necessarily have an impact upon daytime behaviour. The overall change in a patient's daytime behaviour following nocturnal administration of a benzodiazepine is of importance when considering the tolerability and safety of the drug in clinical use. Alterations to the integrity of daytime performance also have consequences for that patient's subsequent sleep and nocturnal behaviour. Thus this workshop was conceived as a platform for examining the interrelationship of sleep, benzodiazepine hypnotics and daytime performance from pharmacological, psychological, experimental and clinical standpoints. The following papers also highlight the complexity of the interaction between sleep, patient, drug and daytime performance and emphasize the need to approach problem areas with appropriate research strategies and experimental methodologies.
