The goal of this study is to see how physical education and sports might help young people develop social values. Physical education and sports are critical in instilling in young people the value of social values in their lives. The importance of association in educating both the mind and the body was studied in a review of the literature. Furthermore, it promotes social ideals among youth, allowing them to form social relationships with their peers. Physical education and sports are an important aspect of education in today's world. It directly contributes to the development of physical ability and fitness. It also helps young people understand the importance of living a physically active lifestyle. Academically motivated, attentive, and promising children are more likely to be healthy and physically active. To put it another way, physical education and sports are part of the school's core curriculum. It is the only programme that allows youth to develop motor skills and improve their mental and physical fitness. Disease prevention, safety and injury avoidance, reduced morbidity and premature mortality, and improved mental health are all advantages of physical activity. Physical education is a course in which students learn about all of the advantages of being physically active, as well as the skills and information needed to incorporate safe, enjoyable physical activity into their lives, as well as how to interact with others (National Association for Sport and Physical Education, 2001). Furthermore, physical education courses should be accessible from preschool through secondary school. Its goal is to address a wide range of physical activities and to encourage individuals who lack leaning to participate in organised competitive sports. This entails abandoning traditional physical education teaching approaches in favour of focusing on the needs and talents of individuals, physical activity is pleasurable. Physical education content must be valuable and resourceful because time for it is often restricted within the school time schedule and curriculum (Fox and Harris, 2003). Gonzalez et al. (2010) also stated that curricular physical education in any sport promotes not only talent development but also a high level of social value development among youth. As a result, the goal of this research is to look into the impact of physical education in fostering social values among young people.
