Sports And The Humanities A Symposium:

Sports and the Humanities William Joseph Baker, James A. Rog, 1983 These essays are slightly revised versions of papers presented in a symposium at the University of Maine at Orono September 30 October 2 1982 intended to examine the relationship of sports to human values in North America Reflecting their origins as oral presentations the essays are informal sometimes even whimsical Yet they are serious attempts to tackle substantial issues They are purposefully controversial raising more questions than they answer Perhaps they are more irritating than soothing Throughout they represent the concerns of lovers of sport but of lovers whose eyes are not blind to the excesses and deficiencies of modern sport Myths

We Live By Colin Grant, 1998-05-19 Colin Grant challenges the popular use of myth as a dismissive designation of the superstitions and falsehoods of other cultures The author maintains that myths occupy a place in our present day lives that is every bit as important to us as the divinities and heroes of classical antiquity were to the ancients The myths themselves are in a constant state of flux and transformation They ebb and flow both within the context of wider culture and individual experience Published in English
