Davis,2016-03-25 An argument that the perception of arid lands as wastelands is politically motivated and that these landscapes are variable biodiverse ecosystems whose inhabitants must be empowered Deserts are commonly imagined as barren defiled worthless places wastelands in need of development This understanding has fueled extensive anti desertification efforts a multimillion dollar global campaign driven by perceptions of a looming crisis In this book Diana Davis argues that estimates of desertification have been significantly exaggerated and that deserts and drylands which constitute about 41% of the earth s landmass are actually resilient and biodiverse environments in which a great many indigenous people have long lived sustainably Meanwhile contemporary arid lands development programs and anti desertification efforts have met with little success As Davis explains these environments are not governed by the equilibrium ecological dynamics that apply in most other regions Davis shows that our notion of the arid lands as wastelands derives largely from politically motivated Anglo European colonial assumptions that these regions had been laid waste by traditional uses of the land Unfortunately such assumptions still frequently inform policy Drawing on political ecology and environmental history Davis traces changes in our understanding of deserts from the benign views of the classical era to Christian associations of the desert with sinful activities to later neo colonial assumptions of destruction She further explains how our thinking about deserts is problematically related to our conceptions of forests and desiccation Davis concludes that a new understanding of the arid lands as healthy natural but variable ecosystems that do not necessarily need improvement or development will facilitate a more sustainable future for the world s magnificent drylands Policies for a Small Planet Johan Holmberg,2019-06-26 First published in 1992 The world is not living within its means Current development policies in both industrial and developing countries are wasting resources and destroying the commons on which we all depend The world is set on a path of deepening poverty and a deteriorating environment New policies are needed to achieve sustainable development This book presents an integrated series of essays on the policies for sustainable development from one of the leading policy research institutes on environment and development issues It concentrates on the developing world and looks at the specific sectors to which the policies have to be applied Beginning with a discussion of what constitutes sustainable development it goes on to deal with the institutional arrangements needed to mobilise human resources for change and the economic policies for sustainable natural resource management It then examines the policies needed in agriculture urban development industry forests drylands energy use finance population and consumption Throughout it demonstrates how those directly involved are best placed to manage their environments and resources Policies must support the experience and resourcefulness of local people Sustainable development requires that they control their own futures This title will be of great interest to students of Environmental Studies
