GETTING VALUES FROM A TWO-WAY TABLE

A two-way table has two lookup values, usually in the leftmost column and in the top row. The value to be returned from the table is the value located at the intersection of the row and column containing the two lookup values.

Once again we can use VLOOKUP to obtain the value from the table. In the preceding example, the value used for the column_index_num argument of VLOOKUP was the fixed value 2, because we are always going to be returning a value from column 2 of array. In the two-way table example shown in Figure 9-3, column_index_num is a variable; we must determine by means of an expression the column from which the desired value is to be returned. The MATCH expression can be used to obtain the relative column number in the table corresponding to the lookup value.

To find the value in the table for  $T = 950^{\circ}\text{F}$  and  $P = 5000$  psia, the expression where the  $T$  and  $P$  lookup values are entered in cells B44 and B45 respectively, returns the value 0.035 for the viscosity. The same formula, using names instead of references, returns the value for the viscosity.
