Explaining Productivity Differences Hiromichi Shibata, 2016-07-26 This book in contrast with previous research and popular discussions that focus on the productivity of workers identifies the critical influence of supervisors and engineers as key drivers of productivity differentials To do so it analyzes productivity at a Japanese car component plant and its three offshoot plants located in the United States Thailand and China and how productivity evolved at these plants from the mid 1990s to the early 2010s The author's participatory observation approach reveals that productivity and work practices converged to a limited degree over the years at all four plants Particularly influential are the persistent differences at these plants in the extent to which workers learn how to combine and integrate their production skills with troubleshooting skills Supervisors play a key role in developing this integration in Japan while worker skills remain separated in the other countries Integrated skill development is promoted in Japan through the trusting relationships that first line supervisors enjoy with their workforce In the plants abroad in contrast the persistence of workers control over their individual skill development and careers impedes the development of integrated skills Manufacturing engineers at the Japanese mother plant also play key linking roles thereby enhancing communications and problem solving on the shop floor whereas manufacturing engineers at the US Thai and Chinese plants play more limited and compartmentalized roles As a result productivity remains high in Japan and lags in the other plants Surprisingly Japanese managers remain reluctant to introduce these more productive work practices in the offshoot plants

Brown, 2013-10-08 The police service in England and Wales is facing major challenges in its financing political oversight and reorganisation of its structures Current economic conditions have created a wholly new environment whereby cost saving is permitting hitherto unthinkable changes in the style and means of delivery of policing services In the context of these proposed changes Lord Stevens formerly Commissioner of the Metropolitan Police Service was asked to chair an Independent Commission looking into the future of policing The Commission has a wide ranging remit and the papers in this book offer up to date analysis of contemporary problems from the novel perspective of developing a reform agenda to assist the Commission Bringing together contributions from both key academic thinkers and police professionals this book discusses new policing paradigms lays out a case for an evidence based practice approach and draws attention to developing areas such as terrorism public order and hate crime Policing is too important to be left to politicians as the health of a democracy may be judged by the relationship between the police and the public The aim of this book is to question and present analyses of problems offer new ideas and propose realistically achievable solutions without being so timid as to preserve the status quo It will be of interest to both academics and students in the fields of criminology and policing studies as well as professionals in the policing service NGOs and local authority organisations The Learning Enterprise
