Cramer, 1962 Study was made of personality factors responsible for anxiety in individuals with impactions in order to provide an effective method for identifying the patients most likely to be difficult during surgery. The personalities of 26 postoperative impaction patients were studied by means of psychiatric interview. Psychiatric data were scored in two ways. Results of one of the scoring methods had a significant correlation with the dental investigator's independent rating of the degree of cooperativeness during surgery. Characteristic of hyperreactive patients was a past history of dental or medical trauma as shown by case studies. It is concluded that by specific inquiry about past dental and medical trauma, many of the difficult surgical patients can be identified in advance. , 1914 Thinking in Cases Markus Asper, 2020-01-20 Who is afraid of case literature In an influential article Thinking in Cases 1996 John Forrester made a case for studying case literature more seriously exemplifying his points mostly with casuistic traditions of law Unlike in modern literatures case collections make up a significant portion of ancient literary traditions such as Mesopotamian Greek and Chinese mostly in medical and forensic contexts The genre of cases however has usually not been studied in its own right by modern scholars Due to its pervasiveness case literature lends itself to comparative studies to which this volume intends to make a contribution While cases often present truly fascinating epistemic puzzles in addition they offer aesthetically pleasing reading experiences due to their narrative character Therefore the case understood as a knowledge transmitting narrative about particulars allows for both epistemic and aesthetic approaches This volume presents seven substantial studies of cases and case literature Topics touched upon are ancient
