O'Toole, 2005 Hudson River School artists shared an awe of the magnificence of nature as well as a belief that the untamed American scenery reflected the national character In this new work color reproductions of more than 115 paintings capture the beauty and illuminate the aesthetic and philosophical principles of the Hudson River School painters The pieces included in this volume reflect a period 1825 1875 when American landscape painting was most thoroughly explored and formalized with personal artistic cultural and national identifications Judith Hansen O Toole reveals the subtleties and quiet majesty of the works and discusses their shared iconography the ways in which artists responded to one another s paintings and how the paintings reflected nineteenth century American cultural intellectual and social milieus Different Views is also the first major study to examine closely the Hudson River School artists practice of creating thematically related pairs and series of paintings O Toole considers painters use of this method to express different moods and philosophical concepts She observes artists representations of landscape and their nuanced depictions of weather light and season By comparing and contrasting Hudson River School paintings O Toole reveals differences in meaning emotion and cultural connotation Different Views in Hudson River School Painting contains reproductions of works from a range of prominent and lesser known artists including Jasper Francis Cropsey Sanford Robinson Gifford Asher B Durand Frederic Edwin Church Albert Bierstadt John Frederic Kensett and John William Casilear The works come from a leading private collection and were recently exhibited at the Westmoreland Museum of American Art

The Hudson River School Trewin Copplestone, 1999 The so called Hudson River School has a place of special importance in the history of American painting Although there were many professional artists working in the early and developing American society from the 17th to the 19th centuries most of them apart from the many charming naive practitioners were itinerant portrait painters or those who looked to Europe for their style and subject matter It was not until the early 19th century that artists began to consider the landscape which surrounded them as an interesting subject in itself when they did they perceived a grandeur spaciousness and quality of natural beauty which filled them with awe and wonderment It was this opening of the eyes of their compatriots to their natural heritage that these painters who have come to be known as the Hudson River School initiated Although in the first instance it was the area of the Hudson River stretching northwards from New York that first entranced them as the American continent towards the Rockies unfolded the artists followed and produced work that revealed a magnificence of scale the great lakes the towering mountains deep valleys and gorges of the land in which they found themselves In this way although the Hudson River was the first area to exert its influence on these landscapists and gave its name to them their work spread widely to encompass the whole land There was also another transcendental aspect to their work they recognized the hand of God in their new environment and accordingly introduced a sense of divine mission into their painting which appealed to the adventurous religious spirit of the early settlers Through this their art acquired a new significance which had previously been absent The story of the artists and their pictorial crusade is included in this selective survey which of its nature can only include a small number of the very many who have been identified with the Hudson River School
