Stereotyping and Prejudice Daniel Bar-Tal, Carl F. Graumann, Arie W. Kruglanski, Wolfgang Stroebe, 2013-11-11 The study of stereotyping and prejudice is a study of human nature group membership and intergroup relationships It sheds light on each of these aspects of social psychology With respect to the first two it has been observed that since groups provide the best framework for satisfying various human needs individuals continuously organize themselves in collectives They belong to a variety of groups many of which they voluntarily select and some to which they are ascribed Group membership therefore is one of the most salient and important of an individual's characteristics The implication of this characteristic is that human beings not only constantly classify other people into group categories either by identifying membership or constructing their own categories but also judge and evaluate them on this basis The stereotypes and prejudice are outcomes of this process They are the beliefs and attitudes toward members of another group In addition the study of stereotyping and prejudice reflects an interest in intergroup relationships While we recognize that a discussion of intergroup relationships may focus on behaviors describing actions such as confrontations violence wars cooperation alliance negotiation or coordination we also believe that each of these intergroup behaviors is mediated by perceptions beliefs and attitudes In the case of intergroup behaviors the listed actions are not performed instinctively or mindlessly but are preceded by cognitive processes which among other outputs involve the formation of stereotypes and prejudice toward the other group

Ma, 2011 Stereotyping and prejudice researchers have provided numerous demonstrations that a person's features can influence judgment over and above category membership It is held that the greater a target's prototypicality the more similar attitudes and inferences will be to the attitudes and stereotypes perceivers have about the group However this hypothesized relationship is vulnerable to alternative explanations making it difficult to assess the association between target features and judgment Our studies address these alternative accounts After developing a database of face stimuli Study 1 we assess feature based stereotyping and prejudice toward Black and White males Study 2 and White males and females Study 3 As expected participants showed greater feature based prejudice as prototypicality increased Studies 2 3 However we found no evidence for feature based stereotyping in Study 2 and found a quadratic effect of features on stereotyping in Study 3 The consequences of these data on theory building are discussed Prejudice Rupert Brown, 2011-06-20 This new edition of Prejudice provides a comprehensive treatment of the subject introducing the major theoretical ideas as well as providing a critical analysis of recent developments Takes a social psychological perspective analysing individual behavior as part of a pattern of intergroup processes Covers the major research including classical personality accounts developmental approaches socio cognitive research focussing on categorization and stereotyping prejudice as an intergroup phenomenon and ways to combat prejudice Illustrates concepts with examples of different kinds of prejudice drawn from everyday life Includes a new chapter on prejudice from the victim's perspective Fully updated throughout with expansion of the notions of explicit and implicit manifestations of prejudice
