diagnosis was 16 patients with SJS 35 patients with TEN and 06 patients with SJS TEN with ages comprised between 15 and 91 years old mainly females The majority of patients with SJS were treated in the Dermatology Department and the majority of patients with TEN were treated in our Burn Center Unit The most commonly reported causative agent was allopurinol Oral erosion was the most reported mucosal erosion and ocular involvement was reported in 47% of patients There was no statistical difference in mortality between patients treated with corticosteroids or intravenous immunoglobulin and plasmapheresis Conclusions Although the majority of patients with SJS can be treated outside an intensive care unit like our Burn Center Unit TEN remains a challenging life threatening disease and many questions regarding best treatment strategies are still without an answer In the mean time we can state that the discontinuation of the suspected drug wound care and early supportive therapies contribute to lowering the mortality rates
