

THE JUDAEAN SCROLLS

BY

G. R. DRIVER

Emerson Professor of Jewish History, University of Oxford

This author describes the new Jewish scrolls found in 1947 in caves in the same locality together with the adjoining ruins at Qumran. He rejects the identification of the original owners with the Essenes in favour of connecting them with one or the other of the anti-Roman groups active in Palestine in the first century A.D. If this view is accepted, the scrolls must be regarded as approximately contemporary with the writings of the New Testament. The concluding chapters are devoted to comparing the scrolls with other writings of this all-important century as well as with the New Testament; and the many points of contact in both language and thought are shown to confirm this conclusion.
