Abstract

In this paper we explore a multiple hypothesis approach to estimating rigid motion from a moving stereo rig. More precisely, we introduce the use of Gaussian mixtures to model correspondence uncertainties for disparity and image velocity estimation. We show some properties of the disparity space and show how rigid transformations can be represented. An algorithm derived from standard random sampling-based robust estimators, that efficiently estimates rigid transformations from multi-hypothesis disparity maps and velocity fields is given.

1. Introduction

Estimation of rigid motion from a moving stereo rig is an important problem in computer vision. To solve it, one must both identify correspondences across viewpoint, i.e., disparity, and across time, i.e., displacement. Searching for the joint set of disparity and displacement estimates that obey the equations of rigid motion is the fundamental step in rigid-body motion stereo.

Unfortunately, it is well known that estimation of both disparity (stereo) and displacement (optical flow) correspondences is often extremely ambiguous. Many common image structures do not offer unique correspondence: repetitive textures, low textures regions, ...

One approach to this problem is to identify a core set of image features which are likely to have unique matches. An operator which selects "good features to track", e.g., [15] can locate points whose local contrast constrains tracking in both the horizontal and vertical direction. But many scenes will not have a sufficient number of such features, or they may be difficult to track over longer time periods. And to only use points at the image which pass such an interest operator ignores the constraints offered by the partially ambiguous points which could in some cases improve the estimation.

Indeed, the success of parametric optical flow estimation shows that reliable estimates of global motion can be obtained even when the local measurements are almost everywhere ambiguous [1, 13, 2]. Such gradient-based methods are appealing because they integrate locally linear constraints, rather than single point estimates of image displacement. Gradient-based motion-stereo has been demonstrated [9, 10], but requires coarse-to-fine processing with 3-D warping when motion yields greater than sub-pixel displacements.

We would like to capture displacement/disparity information at partially ambiguous points, but without requiring a coarse-to-fine method. Our approach is to develop a rigid motion stereo estimator that uses non-unimodal input representations. In most rigid motion stereo estimation algorithms, the input representation is an optical flow and disparity map. These representations capture only the mean estimate (and sometimes variance) of the displacement or disparity. In this paper we explore a multiple hypothesis approach to estimating rigid motion from a moving stereo rig. We use a disparity and displacement space representation in which a Gaussian mixture model represents the match surface over the range of possible offsets.

Organization

The paper is organized as follow. In Section 2, we introduce the use of Gaussian mixtures to model correspondence uncertainties for disparity and velocity (optical flow) estimation. An algorithm to estimate them is given in Section 3. In Section 4 we show some properties of the disparity space and show how rigid transformations can be represented. An algorithm, derived from standard random sampling-based robust estimators that efficiently estimates rigid transformations from multi-hypothesis disparity maps and velocity fields, is given in Section 5. Finally Section 6 shows some experiments with real data and the approach is discussed in Section 7.
