Sociobiology and the Human Dimension Georg Breuer, 1983-01-13 This book is about animals and humans their common features and their gradual and principle differences It tells of democracy in baboons prostitution in hummingbirds bigamy in wrens baby sitting in jackals of chimpanzees at the computer console and of the super ego of dogs but it is also about the labour productivity of hunter and gatherer peoples incest avoidance in animals and humans and of the myths about matriarchy In a language accessible to any interested layman Georg Breuer gives a balanced account of the main ideas and achievements of sociobiology and the main criticisms levelled against it According to him sociobiology has given many a valuable impetus but sometimes presents a distorted or one sided view In particular it has not answered or addressed the question of why man and man only is able to identify and feel sympathy with any other human being The evolution of this most human of all traits confers on us the capability for charity and solidarity and for the happiness of true love which is unattainable by any animal

The Power of the Line Aleksander Dzbyński, 2014-07-18 Extensive research in the fields of anthropology archaeology and cognitive science clearly suggests that the development of a material culture in prehistory was a serious contribution to the mathematization of the human mind An underestimated interface in this process as cognitive and philosophical studies suggest was the capability to perceive the external world in a metaphorical way This book uses several examples to tell this story It does not claim the right to present a universal story applicable for the whole human species although it also questions that universality The cornerstone of the story is structured by the relationship between body language and material culture The examples presented in this book however also allow us to contemplate a less universal phenomenon the similarities and differences between Near Eastern and European culture in the period of the development of farming As such this book also investigates whether clay tokens an invention originated from Near Eastern societies were also responsible for the development of mathematical abilities in prehistoric societies in Europe In Europe however the lack of material representations of numbers in the form of small objects was replaced by linear concepts Linearity from its simple manifestations in the monumental form to its complex use in later megalithic structures requires more thought because it served not only as an ephemeral symbol and a metaphor but also as a practical tool in building anthropogenic spaces Only when we see a metaphor in the omnipresent linearity can we understand it properly in combination with the cosmologic aspects of architecture the role of the human body and the concept of numbers As such the book distinguishes between two dichotomous development paths of mathematization and numerosity in Europe and the Near East the birthplace of farming the measuring stick metaphor and the object collection metaphor The book also discusses further transformations of the measuring stick metaphor into more rational concepts throughout the course of technological developments in Europe
