administrators are career managers who downplay the importance of teaching and research as evidenced by their tireless advocacy for a banal life skills curriculum. Consequently, students are denied a more enriching educational experience one defined by intellectual rigor. Ginsberg also reveals how the legitimate grievances of minority groups and liberal activists which were traditionally championed by faculty members have in the hands of administrators been reduced to chess pieces in a game of power politics. By embracing initiatives such as affirmative action, the administration gained favor with these groups and legitimized a thinly cloaked gambit to bolster their power over the faculty. As troubling as this trend has become, there are ways to reverse it. The Fall of the Faculty outlines how we can revamp the system so that real educators can regain their voice in curriculum policy.

Strategic Planning, Management, and Decision Making Robert G. Cope, 1981 Recent applications of the strategic planning approach in colleges and universities and techniques necessary for its application are reviewed. In addition, the intellectual roots of strategic planning are traced and strategic planning is defined and contrasted with long range planning. It is suggested that strategic planning addresses the total institution and attempts to address the total environment. Five areas of the strategic planning process are identified: establishing the mission, role and scope of the institution, analyzing data on the internal operations, analyzing data on the external environment, matching institutional mission and strengths in order to capitalize on opportunities for alternative formulations of policy, and choosing the strategies that are consistent with the institutions values. These are economically justifiable, are politically attainable, and are consistent with serving social needs. Among the most substantial modern roots of the concept of strategic planning in chronological order of development are the following: geopolitical theory, field theory, general system theory, transdisciplinary management, school policy studies, the concepts and technique of marketing, and the concepts of organizational effectiveness. Approaches to scanning environmental information include tracking new ideas that appear in the higher education literature using a cross impact paradigm that integrates national trends, local trends, values, and institutional sectors; developing a probability diffusion matrix for events and trends; force field analysis; and using value profiles.
