Rattray, 2001 A comprehensive analysis of strategic information warfare waged via digital means as a distinct concern for the United States and its allies In the information age information systems may serve as both weapons and targets Although the media has paid a good deal of attention to information warfare most treatments so far are overly broad and without analytical foundations In this book Gregory Rattray offers a comprehensive analysis of strategic information warfare waged via digital means as a distinct concern for the United States and its allies Rattray begins by analyzing salient features of information infrastructures and distinguishing strategic information warfare from other types of information based competition such as financial crime and economic espionage He then establishes a conceptual framework for the successful conduct of strategic warfare in general and of strategic information warfare in particular Taking a historical perspective he examines U S efforts to develop air bombardment capabilities in the period between World Wars I and II and compares them to U S efforts in the 1990s to develop the capability to conduct strategic information warfare He concludes with recommendations for strengthening U S strategic information warfare defenses Military Review, 1983 Armor, 1960

Clausewitz and Strategy in the Missile Age: A Critique of Bernard Brodie's Strategic Thought, 1990 In the normal course of things it is modern commentators that critique their predecessors In the following pages I will turn this idea on its head by critically reviewing the strategic thought of Bernard Brodie 1910-1978 using the strategist thought of Carl von Clausewitz 1710-1831 as the basis for my critique Specifically I propose to compare their thought using four major criteria as a framework These criteria include what is war why employ military power when or under what conditions should military power be employed and how should military power be used To put this effort in proper perspective it is necessary first to say a few words about the lives and times of these two military thinkers Clausewitz lived his life over a hundred years before the advent of nuclear weapons he was a professional military officer for most of his life He knew war at first hand Brodie by contrast was an academic He never wore a uniform nor did he know from direct personnel experience about the horrors of war He was however associated throughout his life with military institutions He was in fact a member of the faculty that opened the National War College in 1946 Air University Periodical Index, 1961 Air University Library Index to

The Soviet View of U.S. Strategic Doctrine Jonathan Samuel Lockwood,1983-01-01 Soviet perceptions of American strategic doctrine have influenced then use of military power in foreign policy An understanding of how those perceptions are being derived at and of their specific contents is therefore essential to any reflection on direction that American defense policy should take Particularly in the field of arms control and disarmament Soviet perceptions carry severe implications for U S proposals as well as general behavior Lockwood bases his examination on Soviet sources such as newspapers periodicals radio broadcasts and books He establishes that Soviet analysts tend to project their own notions of clear strategy onto U S doctrine and intentions Starting from the premise that the Soviets mean what they say Lockwood is able to give a historical account of Soviet perceptions starting from massive retaliation up to and including Presidential Directive 59 In his final chapter the author gives possible policy strategies to successfully counteract the Soviet military policy Professional Journal of the United States Army ,1979 Air Corps News Letter ,1959
