"Writing is so complex an activity, so closely tied to a person's intellectual development that it must be nurtured and practiced over all the years of a student's schooling and in every curricular area."

—Dr. Barbara Walworth

MISSION STATEMENT

As stated in the University Policy Manual, "CSU is committed to the development of sound reading and writing skills" by having "... effective writing skills... developed among the faculty...". The departments of the College for University Learning, and the Faculty Senate, in its Advisory Writing Standard, stated that writing and reading skills, "critical to personal, professional, and academic learning outcomes for a CSU graduate." In a 2002 faculty survey, 77.6% of faculty reported that the quality of student writing is "extremely important" to student learning outcomes, and another 16.3% reported that it was "important." Improving student reading and writing ability is clearly a priority for both faculty members and administrators at California State University, Sacramento.

The goal of Writing Across the Curriculum (WAC) is to help administrators, departments, and individual faculty members to improve the writing and reading skills of their students. The University Reading and Writing Coordinator acts as an academic support resource for faculty. This coordinator collaborates with faculty members to help them improve their students' reading and writing. The University Reading and Writing Coordinator, in collaboration with Academic Affairs, is part of the full writing support...

- Annual Reading, Writing, and Learning Outcomes Conference
- Summer faculty development retreat
- Campus-wide and departmental workshops on topics such as assigning and responding to student...
