

FIRST AID FOR SPINAL INJURIES

Spinal injuries may be caused by any strong forces affecting the head, back, chest, feet or legs. A person falling from a height may land in a range of positions. The spine is often jarred even when the victim lands face down on the chest. A road traffic accident is a common cause of spinal injury, where the victim is a passenger in a vehicle involved in a collision or where a moving vehicle strikes a pedestrian or other road user.

A spinal injury may occur in sport or recreation, especially in a body contact sport such as rugby, or from striking a submerged object when diving into shallow or murky water. In severe cases, the victim may be paralysed below the level of the injury, e.g. from the waist downwards for a mid or lower back injury (becoming a paraplegic), or from the neck and shoulders downwards if the injury involves the neck spine (becoming a quadriplegic). If the victim is paralysed and floating face down in water, death will occur unless a rapid rescue is performed.

Injuries to the spine are often associated with a head injury and this must be taken into account when assessing the victim and managing the injury.

Step by Step First Aid Procedure:

Step: 1

Assess the victim

- Check the victim's level of consciousness:

If unconscious and breathing normally

- ~ turn the victim onto the side in the recovery position, avoiding any forwards movement of the head and neck
- ~ if possible, especially if a helper is available, support the head during the turn, but do not delay making the turn to do so.
