

TATHAM MOUND SITE

Discovered in 1984, the excavation of this mound just north of Tampa Bay uncovered the remains of more than 70 people who may have died as a result of European disease introduced by the de Soto expedition. At least two of the human bones display insect wounds. One native woman was discovered clutching a metal plate and small rolled tube made from Spanish armor. Colorful glass beads given as gifts to Florida's native peoples by the Spaniards allow archaeologists to identify the site as a place on or near the route of the de Soto expedition.
