

Fluid, Electrolyte, and Acid–Base Balance

By: Noel Torres Bajandi RN

Body Fluids and Electrolytes

The proportion of the human body composed of fluid is surprisingly large. Approximately 60% of the average healthy adult's weight is water, the primary body fluid.

Age, sex, and body fat affect total body water. Infants have the highest proportion of water, accounting for 70% to 80% of their body weight. The proportion of body water decreases with age.

Distribution of Body Fluids

The body's fluid is divided into two major compartments, intracellular and extracellular.
