Down and Out in Silicon Valley Mel Krantzler, Patricia Biondi Krantzler, 2002-02 Like Icarus flying too close to the sun many once promising dot com entrepreneurs have been burned by overweening ambition and come crashing to the ground Besides the economic wreckage left in the wake of their high flying dreams there is also a good deal of psychological turmoil Psychologists Mel Krantzler and his wife Pat both counselors who have helped hundreds of managers and CEOs of high tech companies cope with dreams turned to nightmares expose the shadowy side of Silicon Valley in this revealing book about the personal costs of success In addition to being a psychologist Dr Krantzler is also a trained economist His economic expertise combined with his psychology practice enables him to uniquely illuminate Silicon Valley's culture from both perspectives This is the first book to explode the romanticized myth of Silicon Valley which is still so prevalent in advertising and the media What you never hear about this Mecca of high tech culture is that it has one of the highest divorce rates in the world more children who are psychologically disturbed than in less affluent areas almost no affordable decent housing even for those earning 50 000 a year and widespread alcohol and drug use What the Krantzlers make clear is that aside from the simple geographical designation Silicon Valley is the name for a psychological obsession found any place where people believe that instant fame and fortune can be gained through silicon chips and Web sites This dream nourishes itself on an illusion of power and instant gratification And like heroin and cocaine it is highly addictive promising total happiness but often ending in disarray and despair Based on interviews with many Silicon Valley executives who have decided to change their lives to achieve true well being for themselves and their families this book concludes with a formula for real success a well rounded balanced and fully human life

Towards a New High Technology Development in the Silicon Valley Jonathan Kam Pang, 1988

Santa Clara Valley, perhaps better known as the Silicon Valley, is currently facing many problems and uncertainties. The explosion of the high technology industry has changed the regional scene faster than anyone could predict. The once agriculturally based community has become urbanized overnight. It fostered major growth with many new opportunities but at the same time brought many unforeseen physical and social problems to the region. New employment opportunities led to a dramatic increase in population over the past twenty years and consequently a greater demand in housing. An imbalanced land use distribution has caused limitations in residential land, emphasized the problem of chronic housing shortage, and rapidly inflated housing prices. Housing prices in the valley are rising much faster than average household income in the region and is inevitably forcing most of the workers to live outside of the region. Intensive commuting patterns have caused traffic chaos, pollution, and a deteriorating living and working environment. Despite the imbalanced land use distribution, for tax base reasons alone, there is still the need to continue planning for more industrial land to accommodate the growing industries. In the heart of the Silicon Valley region, San Jose will be the center of future high tech industrial expansion. This is not only because it contains most of the industrial land available for this kind of development but also because these sites are located in close proximity to the newly redeveloped CBD and are linked together by a new 20-mile light rail mass transit system and other major planned road networks. Since the manufacturing functions of the hi-tech industry are gradually moving out of the region, it is slowly changing its composition towards a heavier concentration of research, development, marketing, and corporate headquarter functions. This thesis explores potential forms of future high technology industrial development and examines their implications in relationship to future urban form. The objective of this thesis is to envision the future through a hypothesized design in the context of San Jose. By resolving specific issues, the new prototypical design should represent an idealized physical model toward a better living and working environment.

Pathways to High-Tech Valleys and Research Triangles Willem Hulsink, J. J. M. Dons, 2008-05-23

About the book: The contents of most of the chapters included in this volume were originally presented and discussed during the academic workshop "High tech Valleys and Research Triangles in the East of the Netherlands" and elsewhere held on 30 November and 1 December 2005 at the Wageningen International Congress Centre WICC in the Netherlands At that time we had an informal agreement with Rob Bogers series editor of the Wageningen UR Frontis book series that if the quality and quantity of the talks and papers at the seminar would be sufficient and if there was willingness among the potential authors an edited book volume based upon the results of the workshop would be a possibility After the workshop when we had a critical mass of ten chapters and a dedicated group of committed authors the book project was given the green light As editors we realized that there were still a couple of topics and themes missing and when we had found colleagues for these four additional chapters that needed to be written our Frontis book was on the roll Although most of the time it was great fun the whole process of writing reviewing rewriting editing and proofreading took a lot of time much more time than we originally had foreseen We would like to thank all authors of the fourteen chapters of this book for their excellent contributions
