As the investigation began, British officials were told that there was a problem on the ground and that the situation was not under control. The British government had a number of options, but the only one that was available to them at the time was to send a small force to the area. This force was sent to the area and they found that the situation was indeed out of control. The British government then decided to send a larger force to the area and they found that the situation was indeed out of control. The British government then decided to send a larger force to the area and they found that the situation was indeed out of control.
