Taste & Smell

Taste & smell

Most of our special senses are chemoreception systems: gustation (taste) and olfaction (smell). The degree to which we can respond to taste or olfaction, thereby, and smell is largely determined by our environment. In taste or olfaction, gustatory and olfactory receptor cells that respond to molecules dissolved in fluid (taste) and in air (smell). The sense of taste is less discriminatory than the sense of smell, and there is an overlap between taste receptors. The sense of smell is highly discriminatory, with several types of olfactory receptors, each responding to particular odors. Taste and olfaction are related to smell, vision and hearing, important with the sense of food substances, but taste is particularly affected by the sense of smell.

Concentrations

Taste receptors vary depending on the concentration of the substance in a given solution or solid. For low concentrations, taste is not as salty, sweet, sour, or bitter as higher concentrations.

Gustation

Gustation, the sense of taste, gives us information about the food and drink that we consume. Taste buds on the primary gustatory organ, the tongue, contain chemoreceptor called gustatory cells. These taste buds have four basic components: sweet, sour, bitter and salty. A fifth taste, umami, or savory, has been reported. This flavor is associated with umami, or its agent, glutamate or inosinate. It is associated with umami, or its agent, glutamate or inosinate.

The taste bud

Taste buds, structures that produce taste, have taste receptor molecules on the surface of the tongue. The resulting receptor potential sends to the brain via the gustatory nerve, where the signal is chemically transmitted to the brain via the gustatory nerve. Gustatory cells are about 100 days old, after which they are replaced by new cells generated from basal cells at the base of the taste buds.

Olfaction

The sense of smell is called olfaction, or the detection of odors. Olfaction depends on specialized chemical receptors, or chemoreceptors, located within the olfactory epithelium. These receptors are designed to respond to small amounts of an odorant, a molecule that can be smelled. The brain integrates the input from several different receptors to identify a particular odor. Humans can detect about 10,000 odors.

As air flows through the nose, the odors across the nasal cavity pass through the olfactory epithelium, bringing odorous molecules into contact with the olfactory nerve, leading to the ability to detect odors by increasing the volume of air inhaled, which can increase the number of receptors.

Olfactory receptors

Olfactory receptors in the nasal cavity are produced by the olfactory epithelium. These receptors are located on the olfactory bulb. The olfactory bulb is a specialized structure that is located in the nasal cavity. It is the olfactory bulb that sends the signal to the brain via the olfactory nerve. Unlike other senses, the olfactory receptors are connected directly to the cerebral cortex, rather than through the thalamus in the cerebrum.

Compound sweet and salty tastes, we are left with more sensitive to taste compounds, and about 1,000 taste buds are sensitive to taste compounds. The taste buds are located on the tongue, and the taste buds are located on the tongue. The taste buds are located on the tongue, and the taste buds are located on the tongue. The taste buds are located on the tongue, and the taste buds are located on the tongue.

The synapse

Neurons communicate with other cells at a synapse, the site of a nerve impulse transmission. The space between the presynaptic, or sending, neuron and the postsynaptic, or receiving, cell is called the synaptic cleft. An impulse enters at the tip of the axon, the terminal button, where "messenger" molecules called neurotransmitters. These highly specialized chemicals carry nerve impulses from the presynaptic cell to the postsynaptic cell, where the signal is received by the postsynaptic cell, where the signal is received by the postsynaptic cell.
