

SYMBOLISM

- ▶ Symbolists were a group of French poets who were active during the last thirty years of the 19th century.
- ▶ Symbolism in France began as a revolt against the cold impersonality of the realistic novel and its minute descriptions of an objective, external reality. The rebel poets turned inward, in order to explore and express the shifting, subtle states of the human psyche. They believed that poetry should evoke and suggest, raising itself above the level of objective description only; hence, they sought poetic techniques that would make possible the recreation of human consciousness. The symbol and the metaphor enabled them to suggest mysterious and inexpressible subjective emotion. Often the symbols were highly personal, and their use resulted in obscure, esoteric verse. At its finest, however, symbolist poetry achieved a richness of meaning and created an awareness of the mystery at the heart of human existence.
- ▶ As symbolism sought freedom from rigidity in the selection of subject matter, so it desired to free poetry from the restrictions of conventional versification. The art that seemed most to resemble poetry was not that of sculptured precision of plastic forms but music; fluid melody and delicate lyricism characterized symbolist poetry.
- ▶ During the 20th century the use of symbolism became a major force in British literature. T. S. Eliot adapted it in the development of his individual style and praised it in his criticism.
- ▶ The most outstanding development of symbolism was in the art of the novel.
