

The background of the image features a dynamic, abstract design of multiple overlapping, swirling lines. These lines are composed of many fine, parallel strokes that create a sense of motion and depth. The color palette is vibrant, transitioning from deep purples and magentas on the left to bright blues and oranges on the right, with some areas showing a rainbow-like gradient. The overall effect is reminiscent of a DNA double helix or a complex, flowing ribbon.

In general distributed systems can be classified into Distributed File Systems (DFS) and Distributed Operating Systems (DOS). The survey which follows distinguishes between DFS approaches in Chapters 2, 3 and DOS approaches in Chapters 4, 5. Within DFS and DOS I further distinguish traditional and object oriented approaches. A traditional approach is one where processes are the active components in the systems and where the name space is hierarchically organized. In a centralized environment UNIX would be a good example of a traditional approach. On the other hand an object oriented approach deals with objects in which all information is encapsulated. Some systems of importance do not fit into the DFS/DOS classification. I call these systems closely related and put them into Chapter 6. Chapter 7 contains a table of comparison. This table gives a lucid overview summarizing the information provided and allowing for quick access. The last chapter is added for the sake of completeness. It contains very brief descriptions of other related systems. These systems are of minor interest or do not provide transparency at all. Sometimes I had to assign a system to this chapter simply for lack of adequate information about it. Interactive Multimedia Music Technologies Ng, Kia, Nesi, Paolo, 2007-10-31.
