The Hermit of Far End Margaret Pedler,2015-07-01 pose of her black clad figure which seemed to suggest a shorter tale of years Raven dark hair lustreless and dull framed a pale emaciated face from which ill health had stripped almost all that had once been beautiful Only the immense dark eyes feverishly bright beneath the sunken temples and the still lovely line from jaw to pointed chin remained unmarred their beauty mocked by the pinched nostrils and drawn mouth and by the scraggy almost fleshless throat It might have been the face of a dead woman so still so waxen was it were it not for the eager brilliance of the eyes In them fixed watchfully upon the closed door was concentrated the whole vitality of the failing body
