Battle for Bataan

from the diary of
Richard C. Mallonée

The Naked Flagpole

$11.95

Colonel Mallonée's diaries, on which this book is based, are believed to be the only complete eyewitness account of the Philippine campaign at the start of World War II to have survived intact.

After Pearl Harbor, the author writes:

Stotsenburg was a ghost town. Not a living thing could be seen. . . . I had passed the flagpole hundreds of times but except at retreat formations I doubt if I had ever consciously noted the flag. Now the barn pole was naked and ashamed. . . .

Mallonée goes on from there to describe the fighting on Bataan; the valiant but losing struggle of Filipinos and Americans. The withdrawal of the Luzon army from the beaches to Bataan is an epic worthy of a place in history and the author makes it immediate and personal as well.

After the dramatic moment on April 9, 1942, when the collapse came, the infamous Death March took place. Having survived that, the author became a "ghost of the emperor," a prisoner of war, for forty-two months.

Liberation came while he was in camp at Mukden, Manchuria, and the book ends on this note of triumph.

The editor, Dr. Richard C. Mallonée II, did further research in the Orient and in the Philippines in order to document and clarify what his father had written. The result is a most readable, moving and informative tale of courage, endurance and final victory.
