

Sport in Society, Sociology and Journals: Missing Perspectives and Cultural Idiosyncrasies in an International Social Institution

Abstract

The multi-levelled discourse of this topic brings out the fact that sport appears in different patterns from different levels. Sociology presents an impression that only select perspectives of sport as a cultural and social-scientific social institution. What is highlighted by various developments in the literature. The author focuses culture of the internationalization of the sociology of sport, subjects that sport is primarily in finding technical words which achieve an equilibrium about the topic and the cultural background of the authors, and sometimes even explicitly and even indirectly about sport. Sport actually concerns the culture of body and mind, contradicted by today's mainstream sociology.

The Topic and What It Means for Us

The organization of this paper takes out of the topic: (1) Sport is primarily concerned with the body, (2) Society is everything in which we live. Many disciplines seek to connect on this basis their respective perspectives. (3) Sociology is and has a particular perspective. The perspectives of other human and social sciences are different: Biology, economics, medicine, pedagogy, philosophy, political sciences, psychology, social psychology, ethnology — they all have a different image of man and, in our case, of the athlete and how to train and analyze him and his behavior. Presumably these perspectives are not emphasized or considered from our sociological view. But it is among the tasks of sociology to analyze the perspectives and descriptions of its own and other disciplines, and to show this from its own viewpoint. All the journals in hand have printed, found paper in Frankfurt from which I extracted in dependence on the editor, editorial policy, the reputation of the journal, and the authors, their styles and their cultural backgrounds.

Sport means many different things to many different people. Sport can be pursued by normal people, somewhat differently, sociologists engage in, view, describe and analyze sport either as four different activities, the results of which can become increasingly discussed without seeing through the sociological level. Sociologists emphasize only one particular perspective. From this perspective they are more than other people, but also research much that is alien to others. This literature therefore simultaneously brings gain and loss, advances in knowledge and clouding of the mind.
