

1960s social contexts

- The mid-1960s saw fierce debates about 'permissiveness' in society and on television.
- This was a time of rapid social change. The older 'wartime' generation celebrating the values of duty and perseverance and a younger generation celebrating values of freedom, spontaneity and consumption.
- Programmes like The Avengers were part of that debate as they pushed the boundaries (both social and artistic ones) of their time.
- The glamorous world of the upper middle classes and the world of espionage featured in the news.
- Sexism was mainstream in the 1960s and The Avengers includes sexist references.
- People were also worried about possible attack from international countries as an effect of The Cold War.
