Corporate General Partners of Limited Partnerships Robert W. Hamilton, 1998 The traditional limited partnership is essentially a financing device that permits passive investors the limited partners to participate in the profits of a firm managed by other persons the general partners without fear of personal liability The general partners are personally liable for all partnership obligations including breaches of fiduciary duties owed to the limited partners A limited partnership with a nominally financed corporation as its sole general partner departs radically from this model and becomes a limited liability entity not unlike a corporation Since there is no prohibition against limited partners serving as shareholders directors or officers of the corporate general partner the organizers and managers of the venture may participate in the sharing of profits and losses as limited partners as well as through the corporate general partner After discussing the unique features of the limited partnership with a corporate general partner and the problems it poses in relation to fiduciary duties owed by the directors and managers of the corporate general partner to the limited partners the author analyzes recent cases and proposes that courts should uniformly impose fiduciary duties on directors and managers of the corporate general partner Additionally the author analyzes the issues raised when control over the general partner is transferred to a third party and concludes that the appropriate analysis for determining whether a transfer is valid is whether the transfer poses an increased risk of harm to the limited partners

The Limited Partnership in New York, 1822 - 1853 Eric Hilt, Katharine E. O'Banion, 2008 In 1822 New York became the first common law state to authorize the formation of limited partnerships and over the ensuing decades many other states followed Most prior research has suggested that these statutes were utilized only rarely but little is known about their effects Using newly collected data this paper analyzes the use of the limited partnership in nineteenth century New York City We find that the limited partnership form was adopted by a surprising number of firms and that limited partnerships had more capital failed at lower rates and were less likely to be formed on the basis of kinship ties compared to ordinary partnerships The latter differences were not simply due to selection even though the merchants who invested in limited partnerships were a wealthy and successful elite their own ordinary partnerships were quite different from their limited partnerships The results suggest that the limited partnership facilitated investments outside kinship networks and into the hands of talented young merchants
