There must have been millions of this type made. They were very popular from the late 1800's through the 1950's. There are still a lot of them around. This lock is peculiar in that the cylinder plug extends through the case and is integral with the shackle. The pin numbers act as holes for the shackle. This is one of the few old padlocks that can be taken apart without damage. The ferrule opposite the plug positions the spring that closes the shackle and retains it when open. When the lock is open, without key, the ferrule can be unscrewed, allowing the spring to slip back and disengage from the shackle, or plug. There are some small sizes on which the ferrule is a part of the case casting. A pin that retains the spring can be drilled out and replaced.
