

Solid Wastes and Residues

Conversion by Advanced
Thermal Processes

Waste-to-Energy (WtE) plants are designed to convert solid waste into energy, typically through incineration. These plants can generate electricity and heat, providing a sustainable way to manage waste. The process involves feeding waste into a furnace where it is burned at high temperatures, producing a gas stream that can be used to generate power. The remaining ash is typically landfilled or used in construction materials.

Advanced thermal processes (ATPs) are a class of technologies that can handle a wide range of solid waste, including hazardous materials. These processes use high temperatures to break down waste into its constituent elements, which can then be recycled or used in other industrial processes. ATPs are often used for the treatment of hazardous waste, as they can effectively destroy the toxic components of the waste. The resulting gas stream is typically cleaned before being released into the atmosphere, and the solid residue is often used in construction or other industrial applications.
