The Anthology of Alabama Poetry, 1928 Alabama Writers' Conclave, 1928

HIBISCUS Kirit Sengupta, Anu Majumdar, Dustin Pickering, 2020-05-28 As the pandemic shutdown looms over us we are reminded of those things we took for granted for instance hibiscus flowers the sea the moon or an elderly couple at home who are still in love Hibiscus poems that heal and empower seeks to convey the resonating touch of the flower itself According to Ayurveda the flower has many medicinal uses that include but are not limited to lowering blood pressure and preventing stroke The anthology derives its healing power from reaching across continents It was conceived in India by acclaimed poet editor and translator Kirit Sengupta Hibiscus houses 104 poets luminaries like Keki N Daruwalla Mamang Dai Sudeep Sen Bina Sarkar Elias Sanjeev Sethi Sanjukta Dasgupta Wang Ping Tim Kahl John Grey Michael R Burch Claudine Nash Gerard Sarnat among others Chief editor Kirit Sengupta writes of the concept behind the book As a clinician I can tell you healing is not all about back to normalcy or in other words restoration of the state of being Healing imparts strength It renders authority A distinct relationship exists between healing and empowerment that this anthology intends to convey In the introduction written conjointly between the editors Kirit Sengupta Anu Majumdar and Dustin Pickering the roles the collection declares for itself are made apparent Majumdar writes Poetry is the first language of humanity and how we heal all this the different levels of crisis is the justice that will empower the world Sengupta writes In times of crisis one may approach the issues in more than one way we can demand remedial measures or we can opt for a therapeutic course that will alleviate our suffering We have every right to exercise both the means however Hibiscus poems that heal and empower follows the second way of addressing hardship Pickering himself writes of the socio economical devastation wreaked by the virus and implies that people return to their humanity In taking a bold stance of caution Pickering also shows us an alternative meaning to social distancing minding one's own business is paramount and we should not infringe on others However the anthology is rife with questions about our humanity how we treat one another the forgotten beauty of life and the wonders we are surrounded by and should be concerned with preserving It is recorded that the lockdown has helped restore the environment Hibiscus poems that heal and empower in its ability to navigate steep terrain the cultural and political forces we wish to command while transcending our pettiness to show that empowerment is possible without pretense The anthology elicits a promising journey during this time when poetry is having a bright moment
