

Upper Atmosphere

The Earth's atmosphere has four primary layers: the troposphere, stratosphere, mesosphere, and thermosphere. These layers protect our planet by absorbing harmful radiation.

Absorbing Ice in the Mesosphere (AIM)

AIM's primary focus is the Mesosphere (AIM) which can identify some night lighting clouds in the mesosphere. These nocturnal clouds are made of ice crystals that form over the summer poles at an altitude as high as a temperature too cold for water vapor clouds.

Thermosphere

55-600 Miles

In the Thermosphere, molecules of oxygen and nitrogen are ionized by solar radiation. Auroras are frequently visible from the Earth, resulting from ionization in and near this ionospheric layer. The Thermosphere extends to temperatures with altitude because the atomic oxygen and nitrogen cannot radiate away heat from this absorption.

Mesosphere

50-60 Miles

During the mesosphere it is possible to see meteoroids being torn to shreds in the Earth's atmosphere and they leave streaks of light. Auroras from the mesosphere in response to small changes in atmospheric chemistry and composition, it could provide them for scientists, and in this small greenhouse gases may contribute to a change in temperature. This is a major component in the atmosphere.

Stratosphere

10-50 Miles

The lower layer that allows the stratosphere and absorbs ultraviolet radiation from the Sun.

Troposphere

0-10 Miles

The Troposphere is the layer of the Earth's atmosphere where all human activity takes place.

Ionosphere

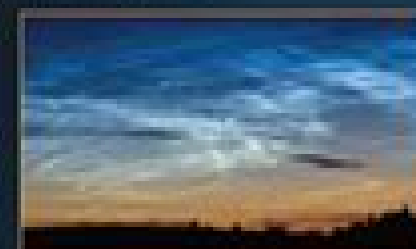

The ionosphere is a layer of plasma formed by the ionization of atomic oxygen and nitrogen by highly energetic ultraviolet and x-ray solar radiation. The ionosphere extends from the bottom of the atmosphere up to the magnetosphere. This layer varies daily in the daytime ionosphere to solar radiation causes the ionization of the atoms, but can extend down as far as the mesosphere. However, these upper atmospheric layers are still mostly neutral, with only one in a million particles becoming charged daily. At night, the atmosphere mostly recombines in the Earth's radiation causes to interact with the atoms in the Thermosphere. There are still small amounts of charged atoms caused by cosmic radiation.

Balloons, Balloons, and Satellites

AIM's scientists use balloons to collect in-situ measurements in the atmosphere. However, the mesosphere and thermosphere are too high for balloons to reach, so scientists use instruments on sounding balloons and satellites to gather more detailed measurements of the upper atmosphere.

Communications

A unique property of the ionosphere is that it can reflect short-wave radio waves, enabling communication over great distances by "bouncing" signals off the neutral atmospheric layer. Variability of the ionosphere can interrupt satellite communication, such as errors in GPS signals for commercial air navigation. During solar storms, this layer can even shut down communication between ground stations and satellites.

Northern Lights in the Mesosphere

Evidence of changes in the behavior of northern lights has been observed by the AIM mission. Recent data shows dramatically less or no content, leading scientists to speculate about changes in weather conditions and pole-to-pole atmospheric circulation.

BARREL

The Ballot Army for Radiation-Induced Relativistic Electron Losses (BARREL) is a balloon-based mission to measure the measurements of NASA's HARP spacecraft. BARREL seeks to measure the precipitation of relativistic electrons from the radiation belts during two multi-balloon campaigns operated in the Southern Hemisphere.
