

were pulled in by Sir G. Scott, instead of being retained in their original state. No other alterations of importance are recorded until the Church fell into ruin about 1780.

The "statutes" of the Castle indicate that three chaplains were resident in the Castle. The first appointment recorded is that of Richard de Wikesdon in 1225 as Rector. He was preceded by the King, as were his successors, until modern times, when the Warden of the Ports had the appointment. In addition to the Rector of the Parish, a chaplain of the "Honour of the Chapel of S. Mary-in-the-Castle" was also appointed until the end of the fifteenth century, when the two offices appear to have been merged into one. These chaplains went by the extraordinary name of "Cocleas," and were the Military Chaplains of the Castle. They were better paid than the Rector, but were also appointed by the King. The term "Cocleas" seems to have been given to them from their usual place of residence having been the Colias, or Colton, Tower. This Tower was supported by a payment from the Manor of Collesbourne, and "Cocleas," or "Collesbourne," is probably a corruption of that name. The Castle is, from very early times, always spoken of as a Parish, and the Church as the "Free Chapel or prebende" of the King. It has always been outside the jurisdiction of the Diocesan.

It has been stated that the Church fell into ruin about 1780, but it was not until 1781 that it was deliberately destroyed. In that year £200 was spent by the Government in turning it into a "cooperage and storeroom." Fourteen years later it was converted into a barracks room, and in 1808 it was ordered to be used as a coal store. It was restored, under Sir Gilbert Scott, in 1860-61, and was further repaired and beautified by Mr. Butterfield in 1890, the roof of the steeple and all the internal decorations being destroyed by Mr. H. M. Gibbs, of Berron Court, Somersetshire.

Very little of its former contents survived the ruin of the building. The magnificent tombs of the Earl of Northampton, Warden in 1614, and William Capeloff, Lieutenant, were probably destroyed during the Commonwealth. Two beautiful sets of Charles I. Communion plates are practically the sole extant materials of its ecclesiastical furniture. The building itself, however, has been spared or so, and remains, not only as a monument of the ancient workman's skill, but as almost the sole Christian building which has survived from Roman times.

THE CASTLE.

In Queen Elizabeth's day the Castle was assigned to John Comar, a hundred years ago to Godewin, Earl of Kent, and in later times to William the Conqueror. That it was a fortress of considerable importance in 1066 is shown by the haste with which William of Normandy hurried to seize it. The Saxons occupied the heights, and no time went on undisturbedly erected certain stone buildings upon them. They surrounded the Church Earthworks with a stone wall, and built, probably in Godwin's time, some defensive works on the site of the present Keep. Odo of Bayeux, by the King's command, occupied Dover Castle, but all traces of any work executed by him or his successor have long been obliterated. The Castle, as it now stands, is an Angevin building.

Recorder of Peterborough states in his Chronicle that "turre fortissima" was built at Dover in 1161. This, of course, refers to the Keep, and the Pipe Rolls supply ample evidence in support of this statement. Between 1168 and 1176 a sum of over £400 was spent in preliminary works, and a notice of the fact that the stone was brought from Gressend by sea occurs in the entries. The main part of the work was done during the last years of the reign. The disbursements were:-

1167.	£267 10s. 0d.	—	On the tower and walls.
1168.	£465 10s. 0d.	—	On the walls.
1169.	£292 17s. 0d.	—	On the tower.
1170.	£1248 18s. 4d.	—	On the tower.
1171.	£362 1s. 0d.	—	On the tower and chaplain.
1172.	£651 1s. 0d.	—	On the tower and walls.
1173.	£128 1s. 4d.	—	On the tower and walls.

During these years, therefore, nearly £4,500 was expended on these works, and the fact of the Keep and wall surrounding it is definitely fixed. It should be noted that the Curtain and Towers in it have been either rebuilt or refaced.

THE COURTYARD.

Form an irregular polygon about 120 yards each way, supported by fourteen rectangular towers with an inward projection. It is built
