Hatcher, James Douglas Martin, 1989 Jewish Identities in Iran Mehrdad Amanat, 2011-04-30 The nineteenth century was a time of significant global socioeconomic change and Persian Jews like other Iranians were deeply affected by its challenges For minority faith groups living in nineteenth century Iran religious conversion to Islam both voluntary and involuntary was the primary means of social integration and assimilation However why was it that some Persian Jews who had for centuries resisted the relative security of Islam instead embraced the Baha'i Faith which was subject to harsher persecution than Judaism Baha'ism emerged from the messianic Babi movement in the mid nineteenth century and attracted large numbers of mostly Muslim converts and its ecumenical message appealed to many Iranian Jews Many converts adopted fluid multiple religious identities revealing an alternative to the widely accepted notion of religious experience as an oppressive rigidly dogmatic and consistently divisive social force Mehrdad Amanat explores the conversion experiences of Jewish families during this time Many converted sporadically to Islam although not always voluntarily The most notorious case of forced mass conversion in modern times occurred in Mashhad in 1839 when in response to an organized attack the entire Jewish community converted to Shi'i Islam A contrast is offered by a Tehran Jewish family of court physicians who nominally converted to Islam and yet continued to openly observe Jewish rituals while also remaining intellectually sympathetic to Baha'ism Many petty merchants and pedlars in a position to benefit from Iran's expanding market migrated from ancient communities to thriving trade centres which proved fertile grounds for the spread of new ideas and often conversion to Christianity or Baha'ism. This is an important scholarly contribution which also provides a fascinating insight into the personal experiences of Jewish families living in nineteenth century Iran.
