

Physics Notes: Forces in motion

What is a force?

It's a push or pull that can change shape of an object, direction and speed

Distance, displacement, speed and Velocity

Displacement- the distance travelled in a certain direction e.g. in a straight line

u = initial speed v = final speed

If an object travels and returns to the starting point velocity is 0

Right is positive and left is negative so if a car is traveling 10m/s to the right it has a

Velocity of +10m/s.

Scalar- a quantity with size only

Vector- a quantity with size and direction

Quantity	Distance	Displacement	Speed	Velocity
Unit	M	M	M/s	M/s
Vector/ scalar	Scalar	Vector	Scalar	Vector

Experiment to investigate average speed

- Measure length of slope with ruler/ tape measure
- Let ball roll down while recording time on stop watch
- Record results
- Repeat twice more for reliability
- Divide distance by time you have recorded to get average speed
- A graph to show this is a joined up graph

Experiment to investigate how the height of the slope affects average speed

- Measure length of slope using metre stick or tape measure
- Put slope on top peg and release ball
- Start stop watch when ball is released and stop when it reaches bottom
- Repeat in this way twice more for accuracy and record results
- Work out average time and then average speed for this height
- Choose a peg below and repeat exactly, measuring new height
- Choose four pegs lower than the last and repeat process at each peg
- Draw suitable graph to compare results

Independent variable: height of slope

$$\text{Average speed} = \frac{\text{Total distance}}{\text{Total time}}$$

$$\text{Average speed} = \frac{u + v}{2}$$

$$\text{Average velocity} = \frac{\text{Total displacement}}{\text{Total time}}$$
