The Economics of Location

By August Lösch

The classic treatise on the relations between economic goods and geography. Lösch shows how the growth and development of agriculture, manufacturing, and natural resources are all interrelated, and how the choice of an individual's occupation is affected by the area involved. The area is seen as differentiated rather than uniform, characterized by a network of relationships rather than by specific criteria such as homogeneity or self-sufficiency. These concepts of spatial relations opened the way to a new dimension in economics.

August Lösch, who died in 1945, was a member of the Institute for World Economy at Kiel, where he directed research on location problems and problems of international trade.

This edition has been translated from the second revised German edition by William H. Woglom with the assistance of Wolfgang F. Stolper.
