

Affirming the Artist Practitioner Researcher

Andrew Kaptein, PhD

Many researchers, including practitioners, regard artist skills as peripheral to, or even antithetical to, research. This is a view that is being challenged by the artist practitioner who is viewed as being at the center of the research. This view is based on the understanding that the artist practitioner is a unique individual who brings a unique perspective to the research. The artist practitioner is seen as a person who is able to bring a unique perspective to the research, one that is based on their own experiences and insights. This view is based on the understanding that the artist practitioner is a unique individual who brings a unique perspective to the research, one that is based on their own experiences and insights. This view is based on the understanding that the artist practitioner is a unique individual who brings a unique perspective to the research, one that is based on their own experiences and insights.

Working in the area of entrepreneurship, artist practitioners, including business, challenge researchers to rethink the way they view the world. These researchers, who are often seen as being at the center of the research, are challenged to think about the world in a new way. This is a view that is based on the understanding that the artist practitioner is a unique individual who brings a unique perspective to the research, one that is based on their own experiences and insights. This view is based on the understanding that the artist practitioner is a unique individual who brings a unique perspective to the research, one that is based on their own experiences and insights.

I find the argument that researchers are not practicing practitioners, and as such, they are not able to bring a unique perspective to the research, one that is based on their own experiences and insights.

For those who are not artist practitioners, the argument is that the artist practitioner is not a researcher, and as such, they are not able to bring a unique perspective to the research, one that is based on their own experiences and insights. This view is based on the understanding that the artist practitioner is a unique individual who brings a unique perspective to the research, one that is based on their own experiences and insights. This view is based on the understanding that the artist practitioner is a unique individual who brings a unique perspective to the research, one that is based on their own experiences and insights.

However, I believe that the artist practitioner is a researcher, and as such, they are able to bring a unique perspective to the research, one that is based on their own experiences and insights.
