

The Moneta papers

Dorrie was an old and very special friend. Was she a new and very special enemy? She had made a promise and now she'd broken it. Or had she?

Only one thing was certain. Something was very wrong. Two couriers had been killed in convenient accidents—one in an Italian brothel, the other in a train on his way to Venice. So Jefferson Boone took on the job: deliver certain papers to the richest heiress in the world, and get her to sign them before she married her Italian lover. And before Boone finds out the dirty truth, he discovers that the canals of Venice, the tortuous turns of Formula One racing, and the ski slopes of the Italian Alps have one thing in common. Death.

Jefferson Boone is a different kind of agent. If you like a little culture with your killing, a hero who's literate as well as phallic, the Handyman's your man.
