

The use of communication strategies and their development in foreign language education

Abstract

Speaking a foreign language can sometimes be troublesome. This is mainly caused by the fact that talking in a language other than our own mother tongue is like venturing into a unknown and distant land: it has its own risks and we do not like taking risks or losing our own face in trying. However this should not be the case. There are certain techniques that can be used to improve the fluency of a non-native speaker's speech. These techniques are referred to as Communication Strategies collectively and are in the focus of this presentation.

A Short History Tour: The Origin of Communication Strategies

In the 1970s, several studies prepared the ground for the study of communication strategies. Selinker's (1972) article on interlanguage introduced the notion of second language communication strategies. Váriadi (1978) and Tarone (1977) provided a systematic analysis of communication strategies based on Selinker's (1972) notion of this kind of strategies: "if the fossilised aspects of interlanguage are the result of an identifiable approach by the learner to communication with native speakers of the target language, then we are dealing with strategies of second language communication". Váriadi and Tarone later introduced a classification of communication strategies that would be used in subsequent research. However, according to Bialystok (1999), "the variety of taxonomies proposed in the literature differ primarily in terminology and overall categorizing principles rather than in the substance of specific strategies".

Current foreign language education in Hungary still has issues with increasing speech fluency of its students, regardless of their level of study. As such, Communicative Language Teaching (CLT) should focus more on the two productive skills (speaking and writing) while not neglecting reading and listening. Therefore, teaching and using communication strategies should earn more appreciation, since they can enhance both productive skills regarding their fluency.

Reasons, scientific ground for support

As it was shown by the supporters of the theory (mainly Dörnyei), communication strategies (CS) can be and should be taught during foreign language education. One of the reasons to do so, is that they are part of what is known as communicative competence, creating the sub-branch strategic competence. The focus of the latter one is to use strategies in order to avoid „communication breakdown“.

Celce-Murcia, M., Dörnyei, Z. (1995). Communicative Competence: A Pedagogically Motivated Model with Content Specifications. Issues in Applied Linguistics. Vol. 6 No. 2 1995 5-35.

The graph shows a decreasing trend, indicating that as the number of people increases, the time taken to complete the task decreases.

Other Reasons for Support

A second reason is that by using CSs there is a high probability that they can lead to an increase in speech fluency (whether that enhancement is significant or minor, see Kozsary, 2004). In addition, the usage of CSs has a high likelihood to lead to a more conscious use of language while boosting one's self-confidence adding to the autonomy of the students (Holec, 1981; Benson, 2001; Harmer, 2007).

Possible Conclusions

Communication strategies are both teachable and highly adaptable to the study situation; therefore, are needed in the language classroom. They are clearly worth the time invested since achieving a greater speech fluency is a must in everyday communication in foreign language education and situations where spontaneous and quick replies (real-time action) is required. These techniques can be made personal by presenting a large number of methods from which the students can choose their own personal favourite(s).
