

Integrating Smoking Cessation with Substance Abuse Treatment

Charlotte J. Smith, MD, Jillian Arthur, MD, Annette Gadegbeku, MD

Department of Family, Community & Preventive Medicine, Drexel University College of Medicine, Philadelphia PA

Background

Smoking is the leading cause of preventable death in the United States. This public health problem is of particular concern among individuals with substance use disorders in that they smoke at a greater rate than the general public. Smoking-related illness represents a major source of preventable death in persons with drug dependencies. Substance abuse treatment programs harbor a high percentage of smokers; however nicotine dependence has historically not been treated as intently as other drug dependencies. As a result, many persons in these treatment program settings do not receive opportunities to address their smoking.

Purpose

The aim of this study was to evaluate the effectiveness of the implementation of a group smoking cessation program among residents currently enrolled in a substance abuse rehabilitation program.

Methods & Study Design

- Participants were all residents of a Salvation Army drug and alcohol rehabilitation facility that was not currently offering any other form of formal smoking cessation counseling.
- Bi-monthly didactic and interactive sessions were held using a 4-session repeating syllabus. Participation was voluntary.
- In addition to the group sessions, nicotine patches were made available to participants.

Towards an Integrated Policy on Psychoactive Substances

Richard Muscat,D. van de Mheen,Council of Europe,Cas Barendregt,Co-operation Group to Combat Drug Abuse and Illicit Trafficking in Drugs (Pompidou Group),2010-01-01 This publication builds upon the work of From a policy on illegal drugs to a policy on psychoactive substances 2008 which examined the ways in which drug policy is formulated and applied in a number of European countries especially in the light of the move from single policies on alcohol tobacco and drugs to one which incorporates all of these substances This volume further presents the scientific grounds for choosing between a separate policy for each substance and a single integrated policy incorporating all substances It also examines how policy is implemented in seven countries selected to cover the entire spectrum namely those countries with separate policies for each substance and those with an integrated policy Substance use impinges on the quality of life of individuals and society at large leading the authors to conclude that new scientific evidence should be given greater consideration Moreover it appears that policy co ordination is a fundamental issue in determining whether policies are integrated or not The question remains open however as to which structures and bodies can better serve single policies or an integrated policy for all substances

many school subjects including the arts literature social studies history government science and culture Action oriented prevention strategies based on these content areas are suggested The Educator s Guide to Substance Abuse Prevention focuses primarily on teaching learning and prevention rather than on information about drugs helps teachers to better use what they already do know and are in order to respond competently responsibly and with sensitivity to the needs of their students attends to the needs of teachers who do prevention work and the needs of children who are the target of prevention efforts describes student disappointment and disillusionment with family school and community as sources of risk and the legitimate domain in which teachers may serve a curative role provides extensive coverage of historical social and cultural issues related to substance abuse and school violence and alerts teachers to the risk to children posed by extremist adult groups prominent negative role models popular culture and peer pressure Integrating Drug Testing Into a Pretrial Services System ,1999 Interior, Environment, and Related Agencies Appropriations for 2016, Part 5, 2015, 114-1 ,2015
