Theodore Roethke, 2006 For the Fire from the Straw Heidi Lynn Nilsson, 2017 Poetry In Straw for the Fire Theodore Roethke writes that straw can feed a fire to melt down stone The poems in Heidi Lynn Nilsson's FOR THE FIRE FROM THE STRAW burn with this kind of metamorphic heat They stun with their intricate troping high lyricism and restive God hunger They rove ruthlessly metaphysically beautifully through the realms of doubt belief marriage motherhood injustice and transgression without ever once using their brilliant against the reader or resorting to oversimplified piety Like Gerald Manley Hopkins she makes manifest the complex human struggle among other matters of faith to not choose not to be I've fought with God she writes in A Record of Loving Water to make myself I meant to be for example in the blond breakfast hour less like the dock from which we all have looked insatiable down Lisa Russ Spaar Heidi Lynn Nilsson's FOR THE FIRE FROM THE STRAW is a dark and strange extension to paraphrase Tielhard de Chardin of a spiritual being having a human experience The voice reconciles sometimes sinister thoughts in a secular air even as she seeks that ineffable from God Jesus Christ or the universe Often shocking in their beauty and forthright worrying through religious experience the poems sing like psalms Partly confessing to a silent listener and partly serving as her own inquisitor the speaker of these poems seems to be awaiting another force in the cosmos unabashed beauty Through she sometimes conjures an echo of Dickinson or her own Viking ruthlessness Nilsson uses poetry for what poetry is for the unexplained language that explains Sean Singer *Straw efficient straw bale buildings Straw bale buildings promise superior insulation and flexibility across a range of design aesthetics while using a typically local and abundant low embodied energy material that sequesters carbon an important part of mitigating climate change However some early straw bale designs and construction methods resulted in buildings that failed to meet design goals for energy efficiency and durability This led to improved building practices and a deeper understanding of the building science underlying this building system Distilling two decades of site built straw bale design

Robichaud, 1998 This synthesis of post fire treatment effectiveness reviews the past decade of research monitoring and product development related to post fire hillslope emergency stabilization treatments including erosion barriers mulching chemical soil treatments and combinations of these treatments In the past ten years erosion barrier treatments contour felled logs and straw wattles have declined in use and are now rarely applied as a post fire hillslope treatment In contrast dry mulch treatments agricultural straw wood strands wood shreds etc have quickly gained acceptance as effective though somewhat expensive post fire hillslope stabilization treatments and are frequently recommended when values at risk warrant protection This change has been motivated by research that shows the proportion of exposed mineral soil or conversely the proportion of ground cover to be the primary treatment factor controlling post fire hillslope erosion Erosion barrier treatments provide little ground cover and have been shown to be less effective than mulch especially during short duration high intensity rainfall events In addition innovative options for producing and applying mulch materials have adapted these materials for use on large burned areas that are inaccessible by road Although longer term studies on mulch treatment effectiveness are on going early results and short term studies have shown that dry mulches can be highly effective in reducing post fire runoff and erosion Hydromulches have been used after some fires but they have been less effective than dry mulches in stabilizing burned hillslopes and generally decompose or degrade within a year
