

himself. And there were, of course, the patents that bore Louis's last known name.

It was a bad game, with parents as cards. The losing player held most of the aces by the end of the 1920s, and played them with skill whenever their supremacy was threatened. When another company tried to play a card that is, but it didn't hold, the referee was called in, in the name of a United States judge. Two suits were brought against real firms by Irving, at that time a partner of Irving Berlin. Russell was brought before the Federal Reserve Bank and the Federal Reserve. The chairman of the Federal Reserve Bank, Mr. C. M. ...

In 1938 the case of Ivory versus Russell was brought before Judge Mervin of the United States Court of Delaware. The claim was for infringement of the Floyd Smith patents held by Ivory. The defendant counter-claimed that the Smith patents were the defendant's counter-claim - meaning that the concept of material operation had not been introduced by Floyd Smith as first demonstrated by Leslie Ivory, but dated back to the era of Ed. and Charlie Broadwick and Les Stevens. The initial hearing brought together the greatest parachute technicians of the time: Leslie Ivory came from England. Les Broadwick was there, and Les Stevens, and the whole of the original McCook team. Their argument was that they represent the most truthful account of parachute design during that first thirty years of the century! Judge Mervin found in favour of Russell, but the decision was reversed on appeal. The Russell Parachute Company eventually sold out of business in 1956.

In 1934, when Stanley Smith's company was making some small headway as a potential rival to the Irving monopoly in America, George Huie kept them in their place through a successful action for infringement of patents pertaining to shipping bin storage systems and the rippled handle - the only two details of the Smith Safety Chain that Floyd Smith had failed to design around.
