himself, and there were, of course, the patents that bore Leslie Irvin's own name.

It was actual gains, with patents in hand. The Irvin company held most of the area by the end of the 1920s, and played them with skill: whenever there was a new patent, the Irvin company would play a card that it didn't hold, the patent was called in, in the form of a United States judge. Two patent suits were brought against rival firms by Irvin, at this time.

In 1930 the case of Irvin versus Russell was brought before Judge Morris of the United States Court of Delaware. The claim was for infringement of the Floyd Smith patent held by Irvin. The defendant counter-claimed that the Smith patent was itself invalidated by 'prior art' - meaning that the concept of manual operation had not been introduced by Floyd Smith but had been demonstrated by Leslie Irvin, but dated back to the era of Ed and demonstrated by Leslie Irvin. Their statements under oath represent the most truthful account of statements during the last thirty years of the century. Judge Morris found in favor of Russell, but the decision was reversed in the appeals court. The Russell Parachute Company eventually went out of business in 1936.

In 1934 when Stanley Smith's company was making some small headway as a potential rival to the Irvin monopoly in America, George Wain kept them in their place through a successful action for infringement of patents pertaining to rigging line storage systems and the ripcord handle - the only two details of the Smith Safety Chute that Floyd Smith had failed to 'design around'.

It is doubtful, however, if the shareholders of the Irvin management, their strong hand of patents, and the skill of their lawyers could alone have retained such a hold on the parachute industry. The proven quality of the product must be considered the primary reason why for twenty years the Irvin 'chute' was virtually unrivalled. Had any other company been able to point to deficiencies in the Irvin safety record, or had any of the same services had reason to doubt the reliability of the equipment, the story would have been different. The story would then have been

combat was in the air This moving book uses letters and diaries to evoke the terrible cost of such warfare Sleepless nights separated lovers and grieving parents are recalled with painful immediacy in this meticulously researched tribute to those who died or were lucky enough to survive DAILY MAIL The empty chairs belonged all too briefly to the doomed young First World War airmen who failed to return from the terrifying daily aerial combats above the trenches of the Western Front The edict of their commander in chief was the missing aviators were to be immediately replaced Before the new faces could arrive the departed men s vacant seats at the squadron dinner table were sometimes poignantly occupied by their caps and boots placed there in a sad ritual by their surviving colleagues as they drank to their memory Life for most of the pilots of the Royal Flying Corps was appallingly short If they graduated alive and unmaimed from the flying training that killed more than half of them before they reached the front line only a few would for very long survive the daily battles they fought over the ravaged moonscape of no man s land Their average life expectancy at the height of the war was measured only in weeks Parachutes that began to save their German enemies were denied them Fear of incarceration and the daily spectacle of watching close colleagues die in burning aircraft took a devastating toll on the nerves of the world s first fighter pilots Many became mentally ill As they waited for death or with luck the survivable wound that would send them back to Blighty they poured their emotions into their diaries and streams of letters to their loved ones at home Drawing on these remarkable testimonies and pilots memoirs Ian Mackersey has brilliantly reconstructed the First Great Air War through the lives of its participants As they waited to die the men shared their loneliness their fears triumphs and squadron gossip with the families who lived in daily dread of the knock on the door that would bring the War Office telegram in its fateful green envelope
