MADAME'S EXPERIMENT TO MAKE HEDDIE.

Heddie, at last, looked upon the world as a new place of the hour, and a continuation of the state in which he had been engaged. He read it in this way, without being persuaded that he was really under the power of the world, and that he had a right to share of the things which he surrounded him. He looked down with great curiosity upon his figure, looked at his nose, and up to his head, and, opening the curtain, he saw a mass of the well-known objects that appeared on each side of his habitation. Every thing seemed strange and unknown, and he said within his own breast, "This is the most distant dream that is in the world." Then he had recourse again to his eyes, which he carefully opened, without feeling any relation from his first notion of the world.

Heddie, using all his resources of action, continued with a wild race of imagination, to see whether he had not at length fully turned, and was really entering upon the world of the
