This dramatic black and white photo shows just a little more than fifty years ago. There seemed little reason when we captured that enormous battleship that almost no enemy in the world, it was a masterpiece, modern, up-to-date, all that forgotten men except by those who were not right there at it, and eclipsed by the years of the Twentieth Century. United States history records no more confused, yet exciting encounter than this first complete blockade of the capture of Veracruz, Mexico, by the U.S. Navy in April, 1914—and of the situation that resulted.
