this exciting new book anthropologist Bradd Shore has created the first study linking multi culturalism to cognitive psychology exploring the complex relationship between culture in public institutions and in mental representations In so doing he answers in a completely new way the age old question of whether humans are basically the same psychologically independent of cultures or basically diverse because of cultural differences The first half of the book emphasizes cultural models from Australian Aboriginal rituals and Samoan comedy skits to more familiar terrain including a study of baseball as a cultural model for Americans Along the way the author sheds new and novel light on many familiar institutions from educational curricula and shopping malls to modular furniture and cyberpunk fiction These observations are then linked to theoretical developments in linguistics semiotics and neuroscience creating a bold new approach to understanding the role of culture in everyday meaning making The author argues that culture must be considered an intrinsic component of the human mind to a degree that most psychologists and even many anthropologists have not recognized This new position of cultural models will make absorbing reading for psychologists anthropologists linguists and philosophers and to anyone interested in the issues of cultural diversity multiculturalism or cognitive science in general together the intricate mosaic of my family history These vivid images and the emotions they evoked helped forge the person I am today The events recounted here will I hope intrigue and perhaps even shock you My culture steeped in traditions vastly different from those of the West may seem puzzling or even brutal to some The mindsets of certain characters may appear utterly foreign to Western readers but I trust that the explanations of our customs will shed light on their motivations Names have been changed to protect the privacy of my elders May these stories provoke thought and spark a deeper understanding of a world far removed from your own
