

Stigma and the Burden of Infection

Dr. David A. Asch, University of Wisconsin-Madison

Stigma is a social process that occurs when a person is perceived to be different from others. Stigma is often associated with negative attitudes and behaviors towards the stigmatized person.

Stigma can be a major barrier to the treatment and care of people with infectious diseases.

Stigma can lead to discrimination and social isolation.

Stigma can also lead to self-stigma and internalized shame.
