challenging controversial and highly readable look at our lives our world and our future Most Americans think of crowded cities as ecological nightmares as wastelands of concrete and garbage and diesel fumes and traffic jams Yet residents of compact urban centers Owen shows individually consume less oil electricity and water than other Americans They live in smaller spaces discard less trash and most important of all spend far less time in automobiles Residents of Manhattan the most densely populated place in North America rank first in public transit use and last in percapita greenhouse gas production and they consume gasoline at a rate that the country as a whole hasn t matched since the mid 1920s when the most widely owned car in the United States was the Ford Model T They are also among the only people in the United States for whom walking is still an important means of daily transportation These achievements are not accidents Spreading people thinly across the countryside may make them feel green but it doesn't reduce the damage they do to the environment In fact it increases the damage while also making the problems they cause harder to see and to address Owen contends that the environmental problem we face at the current stage of our assault on the world's nonrenewable resources is not how to make teeming cities more like the pristine countryside The problem is how to make other settled places more like Manhattan whose residents presently come closer than any other Americans to meeting environmental goals that all of us eventually will have to come to terms with

Break Through Michael Shellenberger, Ted Nordhaus, 2009-03-10 Two of Time magazine's Heroes of the Environment reject the status quo of liberal politics and offer a bold vision for addressing climate change Michael Shellenberger and Ted Nordhaus triggered a firestorm of controversy with their self-published essay The Death of Environmentalism which argued that the existing model of environmentalism cannot adequately address global warming and that a new politics needs to take its place In this follow-up to their essay the authors give an expansive and eloquent manifesto for political change American values have changed dramatically since the environmental movement's greatest victories in the 1960s And while global warming presents exponentially greater challenges than any past pollution problem environmentalists continue to employ the same tired and ineffective tactics Making the case for abandoning old categories nature versus the market left versus right the authors articulate a new pragmatism that has already found champions in prominent figures such as Hillary Clinton and Barack Obama Seeing a connection between the failures of environmentalism and the failures of the entire left-leaning political agenda the authors point the way toward an aspirational politics that will resonate with modern American values and be capable of tackling our most pressing challenges To win Nordhaus and Shellenberger persuasively argue environmentalists must stop congratulating themselves for their own willingness to confront inconvenient truths and must focus on building a politics of shared hope rather than relying on a politics of fear The New York Times
